HIS EX-GARDENER SWEARS THAT HE HELPED TO MOVE IT.

Much interest is manifested by the public in the trial of Dr. William M. Reynolds, who, with his wife, is charged with attempting to defraud the London Assurance Corporation by a false claim of loss through the burning of his country seat at Flushing in February, 1887, a State prison offense if proven.

The case is interesting because of the wealth and social position of Dr. Reynolds and his wife, the latter being the daughter of the late Oliver Charlick, Police Commissioner and it is interesting again because almost every citizen has insured his property in one or more insurance companies and is desirous of knowing how much he may be obliged to go through in the event of the destruction of chairs, two small chests of drawers and a few minor articles.

At that time, he said, there were no organ, billiard table, paintings, nor "mahogany book-cases with 600 standard books in them," as stated in Dr. Reynolds's claim of losses. He also testified that Dr. Reynolds was the last person in the house before the fire, a lot of painters having been at work there.

Dr. Reynolds will undertake to show that the turniture was removed to the upper floor to avoid the painters; that it was locked in the upper rooms, and that Brennau has boasted that he would get even with the doctor for reducing his wages.

pictures from Flushing to Forty-seventh street.

After stating that he and Gormley had sent all the art works in the house on a one-horse wagon. Brennan was asked:

"There was a fine, large picture of a woman driving a chariot, wasn't there? About how big was it?"

"It was a feet high by 5½ feet long, I guess," replied Brennan slowly. "It was the largest one."

This picture was called "The Aurora" and was a copy of a celebrated fresco brought from Europe by Mrs. Reynolds, It cost $1,200 and was 5½ feet high by 12 feet in length!

Brennan gave a list of the articles in each room at the time of the fire, and Townsend took his breath away by asking: "When? How long before the fire did you take your inventory?"

MARKET INVESTIGATION TO-DAY. The "Barrels" or "Roodie" Entry Unexplained-A Request to Stop the Investigation Met by the Reply that It Will Be Pinished if It Takes Six Months-Fine

"Is Mr. Davidson here?" This inquiry by Lawyer Delancey Nicoll marked the resumption this morning of the investigation by the Commissioner of Accounts into the Comptroller's allotment of stands in the new West Washington Market. Mr. Davidson is the will-o'-wisp bookkeeper of Richard D. Brown, who is expected to tell all he knows about the mysterious "barrels" entry in his employer's books, but who has successfully evaded the subposns servers of the investigators.

He was not present and Lawyer Wilder, who represents Mr. Brown, said that he knew nothing about his whereabouts. Chief Clerk Graham McAdam, of the Bureau of Markets, representing the Comptroller, said that he had a statement to make pertinent to this " alleged inquiry." Mr. De Lancey Nicoll had stated that he (McAdam) had promised to produce ex-Asemblyman Daniel E. Finn, Daniel Patterson and several other witnesses yesterday.

This he emphatically denied, and would stand on the official minutes of the stenographer in support of his position. "That's just what I base my statement on. That's just what I base his statement of the stand on the record." said Mr. Nicoli.

Lawyer Wilder asked, as his client, Mr. Brown, is laboring under the grave charge of perjury preferred by Mr. Nicoli, that the examination of any witnesses relating to Mr. Brown's case be postponed until he could be because the protect his client's interest, which present to protect his client's interest, which would not be until to morrow.

"I object to answering such a question." said the witness. "I would like to know what you mean by 'leader.' I don't believe in such things as leaders. Will you make your question intelligible?"

"Are vou the Chairman of the District Committee?" asked Mr. Nicell.

"I am. and have been for years. I hold no office, either State or municipal. I am in business in the saloon business at 17 Centre street. I have three stands in the new market, where I intend to carry on a

Mr. Nicoll turned the witness over to Mr. Wickes at this point, and that gentleman went on to show that Mr. Walsh had made his application like any ordinary stand-holder.
Mr. Nicoll again took a shy at the fat witness and tried to probe him on political matters.

"They call him "Humpy," just as you call me "Fatty." he said.

Mr. Walsh was asked concerning his references on his application. They were Police Justice Maurice J. Power and ex-Assemblyman Daniel E. Finn.

The witness said that he had had experience as a restaurant keeper daing back thirty years, when he was interested in a Chatham street esting house.

An examination in open court with all the horrid publicity that it would entail was something which Freddy dreaded more than letting go of the money.

The story of the debt thus reluctantly settled is interesting. On Oct. 6, 1887, Mrs. Langtry, accompanied by the ever faithful Freddy, entered the bric. horse store of Lamson & Allien, on Fifth avenue.

The Lily admired a beautiful Martin Veroni's Louis XVI, screen, and was not at all bashful about saying so. Mr. Gebhard took the hint and presented it to her, telling the salesman to charge the bill to him.

A bombonnière Mrs. Langtry appropriated for herself, and carried away in her own lovely hands. The screen was left in the store until near Christmas, when Mr. Gebhard's lackey came in and ordered it sent to Mrs. Baron Bianc, 16 West Twenty-third street.
